The Royal Regiment of Canadian Artillery was represented at the funeral of our Captain General by a delegation made up of the Colonel Commandant and four members of

2 RCHA. This remarkable experience will be a cherished memory for all who were honoured to be selected to participate. The Gunner group included the Colonel Commandant, LCol Flanders, CO of 2 RCHA, CWO Hewitt, RSM of 2 RCHA, Sgt Lyons and Bdr Bobbitt, both from 2 RCHA.

The news on 8 September that HM Queen Elizabeth II had died set in motion the plan for her funeral ceremonies, named Op LONDON BRIDGE. A delegation from each of the 16 units and organizations of the CAF that had HM as their Colonel-in-Chief, or in our case Captain General, was assembled rapidly in Ottawa and departed for the UK on a RCAF Airbus. The group comprised two parts: the marching contingent and the senior representatives of the units. At Pirbright Camp the marching contingent refreshed their drill skills and practiced their part in the funeral procession. In London, the senior contingent had briefings and meetings about the upcoming ceremony. The two groups came together for a 0200 hrs rehearsal on the deserted streets of London that allowed the staff a chance to verify timings and provide pointers to the group. Throughout the week, long hours were spent travelling from Pirbright to London.

Senior Gunner from New Zealand and Australia. A subsequent visit was made to the King's Troop, Royal Horse Artillery at their temporary barracks in Regent's Park, where the Colonel Commandant thanked them for their warm reception of MBdr Vanderpost last year, when she became the first non-UK soldier to ride with the troop. At a reception organized at Canada House, the Canadian High Commission to the UK, the entire group united to meet and speak with some of the Canadian VVIPs attending the funeral. These included the PM and Governor General, as well as several former PMs and GGs, along with notable recipients of the Order of Canada and the Cross of Valour. Each member of the group had an opportunity to speak with and get a picture with the VVIPs, who thanked the CAF contingent for representing Canada.

At last, the funeral day arrived, Monday 19 September. The senior group were privileged to be seated inside Westminster Abbey to witness this historic event, while the marching contingent prepared to lead the procession, in concert with the delegation from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. All moved off at the unusual pace of 75 beats to the minute and we passed down Whitehall, through Horse Guards parade, down the Mall, to finally halt at Wellington Arch in Hyde Park. Thousands of people from around the world watching in near silence from the roadside, along with 5.1 billion on screens, as the well-practiced marching contingent proceeded with precision to Hyde Park. There the entire contingent witnessed the transfer of HM the Queen's coffin to a hearse for its final journey to Windsor. To participate in this historic event representing The Royal Regiment of Canadian Artillery was a true privilege and honour for the group of Gunners selected. A fitting tribute was paid to our Captain General of 70 years. She served with dignity and a sense of duty that should be an example to us all. Ubique.

CDS Warns China and Russia are 'at War with the West' and Canada is not ready. Russia and China don't differentiate between peace and war and are actively seeking to challenge the West, says Gen Wayne Eyre.

Ryan Tumilty National Post Oct 06, 2022

OTTAWA — Chief of Defence Staff, Gen Wayne Eyre, told MPs that Russia and China consider themselves to be at war with the West and Canada must rise to meet this challenge. Gen Eyre was meeting with MPs at the Commons standing committee on national security to talk about the threat Russia poses to Canada. He said the threat is broader than the war in Ukraine, but a systemic effort to change the way the world has been structured. "The rules-based international order, which has underpinned world stability, and indeed our national prosperity for generations is faltering. It needs to be defended; the gravity of these times should be apparent to all." Caroline Xavier, chief of the Communications Security Establishment, Canada's cyber spy agency, told MPs that there is a growing concern about cybercrime, but state actors are also threatening the country. "The state-sponsored cyber programs of China, North Korea, Iran and Russia pose the greatest threat, strategic threat to Canada. Foreign cyber threat activities including Russian-backed actors are attempting to target Canadian critical infrastructure operators," she said.

Xavier said Russian-backed actors are trying to sow doubts and division about the war in Ukraine. "CSC noted that we had continued to observe numerous Russian-backed disinformation campaigns online aimed at supporting Russia's brutal and unjustifiable invasion of Ukraine." Gen Eyre said this rising level of concern is happening just as the military faces a recruitment challenge. In other parliamentary testimony, military officers have said the forces estimate they're 10,000 people short. The full complement of the Canadian Forces according to the most recent numbers includes 63,781 regular members, another 29,477 reservists and 5,241 Canadian Rangers. Eyre said getting the forces fully staffed again is a major concern and has become the overarching priority for the Forces. "I am very worried about our numbers and that's why we're putting as a priority effort the reconstitution of our military." He said they're worried not just about getting new people into the Forces, but also ensuring current soldiers stay. To that end he said they're focusing on issues around pay, but also ensuring CAF members have the right tools to do the job and opportunities for training. "The pandemic has not been kind to the Canadian Armed Forces, our numbers have shrunk. And so we're embarking on a priority effort to get our numbers back up recruiting retention, so that we can provide that readiness."

A separate Commons committee has been studying whether the Forces is being used too often for disaster relief in Canada. The number of deployments for floods, fires and hurricanes has all risen in recent years. Eyre said the Armed Forces have to be available for disasters, but they are being used too often today. "With increasing frequency and intensity of these natural disasters, we're called upon more and more to respond, not necessarily as a force of last resort, but in some cases the force of first choice." Eyre declined to say whether the government should be spending more on defence, but said they unquestionably are facing a new environment in the future and Canada is not ready for it. "I am concerned that as the threats to the world's security situation increase, the threats at home increase, our readiness is going down," he said. "The military that we have today is not the military that we need for the threats that are occurring in the future."

Juno Beach Centre Saved from Condo Development

Juno Beach Centre | October 7, 2022

Earlier today, Minister of Veterans Affairs Lawrence MacAulay announced that the Government of Canada will support the purchase of the land adjacent to the Juno Beach Centre. The planned condominium development for this area on Juno Beach will not go ahead. In early March 2022, the Juno Beach Centre (JBC) publicly declared that it was threatened by a condominium development called Domaine des Dunes. At the time, the legal battle was already running into its third year and had drained the museum's financial reserves. The developer's planned use of the JBC's road was an existential threat to the Juno Beach Centre and the Canadian memorial presence in Normandy. Thankfully, we are now nearing the light at the end of the tunnel. The development site will be sold to the town of Courseulles-sur-Mer aided by the support of the Government of Canada. The settlement agreement will result in the leasing of the property to the Association Centre Juno Beach through a new lease that will include the existing lands leased to the JBC by the town. There are several parties to the settlement agreement with the developer including the Government of Canada, the town of Courseulles, the French Government, the Région Normandie, the Départment du Calvados, and the Intercommunalité Cœur de Nacre.

The settlement will ensure that the Juno Beach Centre and the Canadian memorial presence in Normandy are preserved for generations to come. In addition, the portion of Juno Park between the museum and the sea, including the bunkers our young Canadian guides lead tours through, will also come under the 99-year lease, which was signed in 2001. This will ensure the JBC remains in control of its road and all significant lands on the peninsula. Discussions are underway to secure a more permanent arrangement for this historic property that compliments the existing commemorative site and ensures the JBC is protected from similar threats in the future. We are extraordinarily grateful for the time, effort, and energy put forward by the Minister, his staff at Veterans Affairs Canada, the Embassy of Canada to France, and the Embassy of France to Canada over the past several months to help bring a positive resolution to the dispute. Equally, we appreciate the work of French state officials, including the French Minister Delegate for Remembrance and Veterans, the Préfet du Calvados Thierry Mosimann, and the Mayor of Courseulles Anne-Marie Philippeaux and her municipality.

There are many other organizations and individuals we need to thank for their support during this difficult time for the Juno Beach Centre. Foremost among these include the organizers of the Save Juno Beach citizens' campaign and the tens of thousands of Canadians who voiced their concerns in letters to officials in Canada and France or donated to the Juno Beach Centre Association's Emergency Fund. We thank the French association Les Amis du Centre Juno Beach, who have stood by the JBC from the beginning of this battle. Thank you as well to the Comité Juno Canada Normandie and the environmental associations who stood against the project. Finally, thank you to all of the French individuals who did the best they could with their limited power but tremendous determination. The collective voices on both sides of the Atlantic made a difference and ensured that Canadian and French officials took concrete actions to prevent this enormous insult to the memory of our soldiers – all volunteers and many as young or younger than 18 – who began the liberation of France from Juno Beach.

With the beach secure once again, the Juno Beach Centre can continue and enhance its important work as a living memorial that connects people with the past. With the 80th anniversary of D-Day and the Battle of Normandy on the horizon, the JBC is committed to a program of sustainable development and the renewal of the "Faces of Canada Today" gallery space. This permanent exhibition is the capstone of any visit to the JBC. It showcases Canada's evolution since the war, and helps visitors understand the modern Canada that over 1 million Canadian Veterans (in a country of 11 million) helped to build – our Veterans' true legacy. Currently, the gallery presents modern Canada as it existed 20 years ago and is sorely in need of a major upgrade. A renewed Faces of Canada Today exhibition will send a strong signal that Canada is experiencing a major shift in our culture of remembrance as the last of our Second World War Veterans pass away. The renewed exhibition will form the core of the JBC's effort to engage with modern Veterans and ensure that they feel welcomed and represented at the museum.

The Juno Beach Centre Association is seeking corporate sponsorships to help us breathe new life into this exhibition space. We are also looking for partners to help us achieve our sustainable development goals. Our Veterans understood that a better Canada and a better world would be their memorial to the Second World War. Our sustainable development initiative carries the same principle forward. Out of respect for the sacrifices made by Canadians to liberate Europe in the Second World War, we must do our part in the face of climate-related events that threaten peace today. Please consider making a donation to the Juno Beach Centre Association to support these initiatives. They fought to protect our land and freedom; it is our collective duty to protect what they fought for.

Long-Term Protection for Juno Beach in France

Veterans Affairs Canada Oct 07, 2022,

Ottawa, ON, Oct. 7, 2022 /CNW/ - On 6 June 1944, Canadians landed on Juno Beach as part of the D-Day invasion that marked a turning point for Allied forces during the Second World War.

Since then, The Juno Beach Centre has become a place of remembrance and emotion for Veterans, their families, Canadians and French citizens. This iconic site must be preserved and respected, as it commemorates the Canadians who served their country and helped liberate France. A proposed condominium development on land adjacent to the site had posed a threat to both the integrity of Juno Beach itself and Juno Beach Centre operations. The issue has captured the hearts and minds of concerned citizens in Canada and France who have written tens of thousands of letters and emails calling for the site's protection.

Today, the Honourable Lawrence MacAulay, Minister of Veterans Affairs and Associate Minister of National Defence, Patricia Miralles, Secretary of State to the Minister for the Armed Forces, in charge of Veterans Affairs and Memory, and Anne-Marie Philippeaux, Mayor of Courseulles-sur-Mer, confirmed their collaboration and steadfast long-term commitment to protect the Juno Beach site in France. The Canadian and French governments worked in close collaboration to find a positive solution. Contributions from the Canadian and French governments, the town of Courseulles-sur-Mer, the conseil régional de Normandie, the conseil départemental du Calvados, and the communauté de communes Cœur de Nacre will allow the preservation of the parcel of land identified for development. It will be re-united with two other parcels of land adjacent to form one site, and a 99-year lease will be negotiated. This investment secures the long-term protection of Juno Beach and the use of the site for commemorative purposes and supports the Juno Beach Centre's work in honouring the achievements and sacrifices of those who fought for our freedom and democracy.

Russian Tactical Nuke Wouldn't Confer Much Battlefield Advantage

Experts Say, But the environmental and health effects would be enormous and long-lasting. Patrick Tucker Technology Editor, Defense One October 7, 2022

As Russian officials up their nuclear saber-rattling and the Pentagon games out what might happen if Russia were to use one of its 2,000 or so lower-yield nuclear weapons, experts caution that even a relatively small nuclear blast would have far-reaching political and environmental effects. But it would not help Russia win the war. You might be used to thinking about nuclear weapons in terms of the civilization-destroying half-megaton-class warheads atop intercontinental ballistic missiles. But both the United States and the Soviet Union had a number of smaller nuclear weapons in the one- to 50-kiloton range throughout the Cold War. These are sometimes referred to as "tactical" nuclear weapons, which technically refers to the delivery system but also speaks to their likely use as part of a conventional conflict rather than to deter one. US inventories of these peaked in 1967 and fell afterward, especially when the Cold War ended.

Russia chose a different path, according to this 2017 Johns Hopkins Applied Physics Lab paper. "Recognizing that nuclear weapons were the only affordable means to offset the superior conventional weaponry of NATO, Russia continued to invest in a robust research and development program focused on low-yield nuclear weapons," its authors wrote. How much damage could one of these do? The answer depends greatly on where it was used. The online tool NukeMap suggests that a 20-kiloton attack on Kyiv would kill more than 31,000 people and injure another 65,000 within 24 hours. Even those numbers may be a big underestimation. Michael Frankel, one of the 2017 paper's authors and a former fellow at the Johns Hopkins Applied Physics Lab, told Defense One via email, "The immediate (prompt) effects would be pretty horrific if you were caught unprotected within a few kilometers, and the military application would presumably be intended to annihilate local concentrations of enemy troops (if they were stupid enough to concentrate in a way that provided such a target), or perhaps important supply depots and such like."

Turkish Members of CBRN Specialist Defense Squadron affiliated to the 1st Main Jet Base Command in Eskisehir and specializing in chemical, biological, radiological and nuclear (CBRN) attacks, attend training exercise by creating combat conditions in Konya, Turkiye on July 17, 2022.

But Frankel said such a weapon, used on the actual Ukrainian battlefield against military forces, wouldn't yield a big advantage for Russia. "It is still hard to think of many targets that might be 'worthy' of use of nuclear weapons as just another battlefield explosive, albeit a big one," he wrote. A lot of that has to do with the enormous size of the battlefield. The total amount of land still occupied by Russia is almost the size of Portugal and the Ukrainians are fighting on multiple fronts, not in the sort of concentrations that would lend themselves to targeting by such a weapon. "A five-kiloton nuclear explosion will be an effective killer - but only over a relatively short distance, probably less than 1 or 1.5 km. Chances of surviving such a blast (along with any heavy equipment) are pretty good once you get beyond that distance, and beyond two kilometers even better. So to use a nuke to halt or throw back a twenty or thirty kilometer long front advance does not seem feasible," Frankel wrote.

For Russia, he wrote, "A nuke might be just the thing to create a punch-through corridor against a defensive line (if you were to ignore the nicety of driving your troops directly across a radiation contaminated battleground) for your counter-attack, but that hardly seems to conform to current reality, where Russia would need sufficient troops poised to aggressively pursue such a strategy." Nuclear fallout and secondary environmental, radiological effects are part of the point of strategic weapons, which are meant to be maximally destructive. Fallout is much more of a bug than a feature with tactical weapons—and one that isn't easily gotten rid of, the Johns Hopkins authors wrote. "Pure fusion, without the use of any fission trigger, remains the gold standard for a 'usable' nuclear weapon in the sense that such a weapon would be fallout free. Additionally, the resulting blast environment would be reduced, whereas the prompt radiation footprint would be increased—a particularly effective combination if such weapons are to be used against enemy ground forces on friendly territory. However, pure fusion, at yields sufficient for warfighting applications, would be extremely difficult to achieve," they wrote.

That means that any weapon that Russia used in Ukraine would poison a much larger area than its specific target. And there aren't any good means to predict just how far that pollution and contamination might reach. Edward Geist, a policy researcher at the RAND Corporation, recently argued on Twitter that the Cold War studies that the United States's did on the effects of tactical nuclear weapons "were mostly derived from simplified physical/computational models and validated where possible from the available test data, not derived from first principles. As a consequence, these models could potentially be extremely misleading and fail to predict catastrophic collateral effects. One such effect is rainout/washout from a nuclear explosion, which could result from the use of low-yield nuclear weapons such as those possessed by Russia." Said Frankel: "The biggest uncertainty and likely most consequential result of such use is likely political, which I think dwarfs the purely physical uncertainty of the results of a nuclear explosion." US officials have not spelled out how they would respond to Russian nuclear weapons use, only that the response would be "catastrophic" for the Putin regime.

Who (or What) Is It?

Last Week: This little soldier is Harold Steves. His family home and farm is located at the dike at the west end of Steveston Highway in Richmond, BC. The 15th Coast Arty Regt had two Field guns located there to cover the entrance to the Fraser River during the war and the troop adopted Hal as their 'mascot'. Not sure what rank he was here, although the lanyard would indicate he was an OR, but he was eventually made 'CO'. The Troop had an unofficial 'canteen' in the basement of Hal's house and the family still has a small museum there where the uniform is proudly displayed. A live fire practise platform for a 3.5" AA gun was situated in their front yard and the family had to open all their windows when the gun fired. There were a number of windows broken throughout the war and DND had to pay a substantial amount after the war to repair cracked walls and other damage. The AA live fire site was used by the HAA troop deployed on Lulu Island. The picture was taken at Fort Steveston, located at the SE corner of No 1 Road and Steveston Highway, which accommodated the personnel from the HAA Troop and the FA troop.

This Week: Those of your following the current "special military operation" in Ukraine are probably aware that part of Ivan Ivanovich's problem is that he (not many women in combat roles in the Russian Army these days) relies on rail transportation for his logistics. This is in contrast to our Ukrainian friends, who make extensive use of road transportation, in addition to rail and air. Some of this over-reliance on railways might be cultural, as Russia is famous for the Trans-Siberian Railroad, whose role in knitting together the vast nation cannot be underestimated. Russia also has a long history of using armoured trains in conflicts and may well be dusting off museum pieces to help in the struggle. As an aside, one of my professors in the 1960s was said to have been born on a White Russian armoured train that was on its way to serve a new master, the Old Marshal of Manchuria, Zhang Zuolin.

Well, this week's photo isn't of that long-lost behemoth. In fact, we don't really know much about this cute set of mini-armoured trains. Thev appear to be selfpropelled, and are crewed by intelligent-looking lads, so must be on our side. However, where that side is might surprise you. We will give you one hint: they were used in a post-war Asian conflict in which the good guys come out the winners. Actually, that's two hints, isn't it!

Well, if you know what these are all about, please contact the usual suspects: the editor, Bob Mugford (bb.mugford@gmail.com), or the author, John Redmond (johnd._redmond@telus.net).
